

Simply Charlotte Mason presents

Dubens

Picture Study Portfolios
by Emily Kiser

Breathe a sigh of relief—you, the teacher, don't have to know about art in order to teach picture study!

With Picture Study Portfolios you have everything you need to help your family enjoy and appreciate beautiful art. Just 15 minutes once a week and the simple guidance in this book will influence and enrich your children more than you can imagine.

In this book you will find

- A living biography to help your child form a relation with the artist
- Step-by-step instructions for doing picture study with the pictures in this portfolio
- Helpful Leading Thoughts that will add to your understanding of each picture
- Extra recommended books for learning more about the artist

"We cannot measure the influence that one or another artist has upon the child's sense of beauty, upon his power of seeing, as in a picture, the common sight of life; he is enriched more than we know in having really looked at even a single picture."—Charlotte Mason

Simply
Charlotte Mason
.com

Peter Paul Rubens
(1577–1640)

by Emily Kiser

To be used with the Picture Study Portfolio: Rubens published by Simply Charlotte Mason

Rubens
© 2017 by Emily Kiser

All rights reserved. However, we grant permission to make printed copies or use this work on multiple electronic devices for members of your immediate household. Quantity discounts are available for classroom and co-op use. Please contact us for details.

Cover Design: John Shafer

ISBN 978-1-61634-398-9 printed
ISBN 978-1-61634-399-6 electronic download

Published by Simply Charlotte Mason, LLC
930 New Hope Road #11-892
Lawrenceville, Georgia 30045
simplycharlottesmason.com

Printed by PrintLogic, Inc.
Monroe, Georgia, USA

Contents

Picture Study	5
How to use a Picture Study Portfolio	9

Rubens

The Story of Peter Paul Rubens	11
For Further Reading	17
Rubens Picture Study	19
Daniel in the Lions' Den	20
St. George and the Dragon	21
The Descent from the Cross	22
Night Scene	23
The Artist, His Wife Helena Fourment, and Their Son, Peter Paul	24
The Adoration of the Magi	25
A View of Het Steen in the Early Morning	26
The Raising of the Cross	27

Picture Study

Why do we do Picture Study?

A Charlotte Mason education is full of variety. Parents spread a feast before their children, giving them endless opportunity to taste, savor, enjoy, discover, and appreciate many different kinds of intellectual food, otherwise known as ideas. Nature study, music, and art are just as important in this balanced feast as math, reading, and science. Picture study doesn't take much time, just fifteen minutes or so each week, but its benefits are far reaching: "We cannot measure the influence that one or another artist has upon the child's sense of beauty, upon his power of seeing, as in a picture, the common sights of life; he is enriched more than we know in having really looked at even a single picture" (Home Education, p. 309).

Charlotte Mason says that it rests with parents and no others to provide an intellectual culture by which she means, "not so much the getting of knowledge, nor even getting the power to learn, but the cultivation of the power to appreciate, to enjoy, whatever is just, true, and beautiful in thought and expression" (Formation of Character, p. 212, emphasis mine).

Through conscientious study of the great masters of art, children take delight in the "just, true, and beautiful" expression that these artists have given us. Charlotte Mason went so far as to tell us that God "whispers in the ear" of the great artists and we owe it to Him to study their works and read their messages rightly (Ourselves, Part 2, p. 102). This ability to appreciate and read a painting rightly is a skill to be developed over time, one that develops naturally as we, the teachers, expose our children to great works of art. "As in a worthy book we leave the author to tell his own tale, so do we trust a picture to tell its tale through the medium the artist gave it" (Towards A Philosophy of Education, p. 216).

How do we do Picture Study?

“But the reader will say, ‘A young child cannot appreciate art; it is only the colour and sentiment of a picture that reach him. . . .’ But, as a matter of fact, the minds of children and of their elders alike accommodate themselves to what is put in their way; and if children appreciate the vulgar and sentimental in art, it is because that is the manner of art to which they become habituated” (Home Education, pp. 307, 308).

Art appreciation is an integral part of the abundant feast that parents should spread before their children. Just as we weed the “twaddle” out of our bookshelves, and replace it with high quality literature, we should be feeding our children’s intellects with high quality art, not “vulgar, sentimental” illustrations that are common in children’s books. Our children are born persons who appreciate real art, from a very young age.

“We recognise that the power of appreciating art and of producing to some extent an interpretation of what one sees is as universal as intelligence, imagination, nay, speech, the power of producing words. But there must be knowledge and, in the first place, not the technical knowledge of how to produce, but some reverent knowledge of what has been produced; that is, children should learn pictures, line by line, group by group, by reading, not books, but pictures themselves” (Towards a Philosophy of Education, p. 214, emphasis mine).

The first step in doing picture study is supplying your children with good art. Charlotte Mason believed that art appreciation, in the form of picture study, should be included in a student’s lessons from the age of six onwards. Each term the student studies six or so works by a single artist. It is not important to study artists in chronological order, and we do not give young children teaching on art history periods; rather, they will assimilate this information as their history reading progresses, and their knowledge of art increases. Breathe a sigh of relief—you, the teacher, don’t have to know about art in order to teach picture study! “[T]he first and most important thing is to know the pictures themselves” (Towards a Philosophy of Education, p. 216). It can be helpful to choose artists to study who painted during, or pictured scenes from, the history period you are studying, although this is not necessary. More important, make sure that the styles of the artists studied during the year are different from one another to avoid confusion for your children.

When we begin to study a new artist Charlotte Mason suggested that we read a short story of that artist’s life. Then we let the children study one picture, silently taking it all in, noticing every detail until they know it and see it in their mind's eye. This type of study will furnish them with a portable gallery hung in their mind that they will carry with them throughout their lives. They will have made connections with hundreds of great works of art over the course of their school studies, and will know these works intimately.

After studying the picture, the reproduction is turned over or hidden from sight, and a six- to nine-year-old then describes what he saw with all the details he took in, maybe drawing a few lines to show where various objects were located—all from memory. An older child adds to this narration a description of the lines of composition, light and shade, and the style of this artist, as he is able. (All of this knowledge comes through the simple study of pictures in this manner, week after week, short after short lesson.) High school students may render in mono-chrome (all one color), and from memory, as many details of the picture as they can remember. Don't have your children attempt to reproduce the picture exactly; Charlotte Mason said this lessens a child's reverence for the artwork (Towards a Philosophy of Education, p. 216).

When the narrations, oral or drawn, are complete, a discussion about the picture may occur. Teachers should keep in mind that they are not the dispensers of knowledge, but should tell the name of the piece and ask the child's response to it. Did you like this painting? What did this picture make you think of? Did it remind you of anything you've read about? These simple questions further a child's interaction with the piece, helping him connect the new painting to his previous knowledge. Many works of art have subjects from literature, mythology, the Bible; your children will recall the stories that they have read or will remember the picture when they do read about the subjects portrayed.

All of these things occur in one short lesson each week. Fifteen or twenty minutes once a week is not hard to fit in, even though your school schedule may seem full. The change in type of lesson, the enjoyment afforded by looking at great art, and the relations your students will make are just some of the rewards you will discover by including picture study in your home school.

How to use a Picture Study Portfolio

1. Read the story.

At the start of the term, read the story of the artist included in this portfolio. It may take one or two lessons to complete the reading, but keep the lessons short—fifteen to twenty minutes maximum. Make sure students narrate the reading, either orally or in written form according to their ability.

2. Select a picture

After this introduction to the new artist for the term, select one picture to study per lesson. Charlotte Mason recommended six different pictures. This allows students to become familiar with the style of the artist, after even just six pictures they will recognize paintings they have not seen before as the work of an artist they have studied. We have included more than six pictures so that you may choose which you would like to study. There is no particular order to the pictures; it isn't necessary to study some over others. The choice is yours; select pictures that appeal to you and your children. Spread the individual works out over the term, or introduce one painting each week for six weeks and then allow the students quiet time over the remaining weeks to look over the pictures at their leisure.

3. Do a picture study.

During the picture study lesson follow these steps:

- Ask the children to tell you about the picture you looked at last time. If this is the first picture study of the term, ask them to tell you a little about the artist's life, where he was from, or something else they remember about him.

- Before they look at the picture, you may want to tell them how large the actual work is, comparing it to some object they are familiar with. Do not tell them the title yet.
- Have the children look at the picture silently for 3–5 minutes, looking closely at all the details in the painting until they can see it in their mind’s eye. Have them check to make sure they can see the whole picture with their eyes closed.
- Next, ask the student(s) to narrate the picture, telling as much as they can about the painting. If you are doing picture study with more than one child, start with one and stop him after he has narrated some of the picture, then have the next child add to his sibling’s narration. Older students may do a drawing of the piece from memory if they are able.

4. Have a Picture Talk.

Last, have a “Picture Talk.” Now tell the children the title of the work. Does this shed any light on what they thought was happening in the picture? What do they think of this picture? Do they like it? How does it make them feel? Can they tell what time of day it is? This is not a time to quiz the student(s) on what they may have missed; it is a time for them to engage and contemplate the picture further. Charlotte Mason tells us that questions about what they think never bore the students, but quizzing them does! If there is a story behind the picture, you may want to look that up and read it if there is time. But keep the lesson short!

5. Display the picture in your home.

Put the picture of the week on display somewhere in your home where everyone can see it.

That’s all there is to it. Enjoy this course of your educational feast. Your family will be blessed by having “a couple of hundred pictures by great masters hanging permanently in the halls of [your] imagination” (Towards a Philosophy of Education, p. 43).

The Story of Peter Paul Rubens

from Stories of the Painters by Amy Steedman, edited by Emily Kiser

It was on the eve of St. Peter and St. Paul's Day in the year 1577 that, in a dismal little house at Siegen, a ray of hope and sunshine came to brighten the lives of Jan Rubens and his wife Maria.

Sunshine does not fall on the good alone. Everyone has a share of it, and so Jan Rubens had his portion as well as Maria, his most deserving wife.

Jan had been foolish as well as undeserving. He had once been a magistrate in Antwerp, in Flanders (now Belgium), rich and highly respected, and it was then that he did the wisest act of his life, which was to marry Maria, the daughter of an Antwerp merchant.

Very difficult days were coming to Antwerp just then. It was a rich, prosperous city, having captured all the trade from its stranded rival Bruges, but the might of Spain and the terrors of the Inquisition were now beginning to cast a shadow over its prosperity.

Jan was not quite sure whether to side with his own people or cast in his lot with the Spaniards. He wanted to be on the side of the winners, but there the difficulty came in. Who would in the long run be the winners?

At first he decided to be a Calvinist, but when the Inquisition drew near he hastily made submission to Spain and became a Roman Catholic. Even then he did not feel quite safe, so packed up and left Antwerp, and went to settle at Cologne. There at the court he fell into bad ways, which at last landed him in a prison cell at Siegen.

He had been foolish, and he was not to be trusted, but his good wife loved him in spite of it all, and not only forgave him herself, but persuaded the governor to forgive him too, and to set him at liberty on bail. It was at that time that the new ray of hope

For Further Reading

If you are interested in reading more about Peter Paul Rubens, check your library for the following resources:

Famous Old Masters of Painting, Roland McKinney (Dodd, Mead, 1951)

Chapter biographies of great artists. For elementary through middle school readers.

The Golden Gift: Story of Peter Paul Rubens, Brother Roberto (Dujarie Press, 1962)

Narrative biography of the artist for upper-elementary through middle school readers.

Story-Lives of Master Artists, Anna Curtis Chandler (J.B. Lippincott, 1953)

Narrative chapter biographies of many artists. For upper-elementary readers on up.

Rubens, Elizabeth Ripley (Oxford, 1957)

A very good series of biographies of the artists, much recommended if you can locate these out-of-print gems! For middle school on up.

Living Biographies of Great Painters, Henry Thomas and Dana Lee Thomas (Garden City, 1940)

These slightly longer chapter biographies are for middle school readers on up.

Rubens Picture Study

Choose six of the following pictures to study with your students; select those you like best, or that your students will enjoy the most. There is no order to the following pages, though the first few pictures are generally the artist's best known works; the extra pictures are included to give you options when choosing pieces to study.

In each lesson, use the "Leading Thoughts" to lead your students in a Picture Talk after they have studied the piece and given their narrations. You may choose to talk about or ask any, all, or none of the questions and comments. These are included to provide any helpful information that you and your students may not be familiar with, and to draw your attention to significant points of the work of art. Remember not to lecture your students; ask them what they think of the painting. After even a short time you will be amazed at the number, and quality, of relations your students will have formed with great artists and their works!

Daniel in the Lions' Den

c. 1614–16, oil on canvas, 88.3" x 130.1"
National Gallery of Art, Washington, D.C.

Present this picture as described on pages 9 and 10.

Leading Thoughts

Read the story of the Lions' Den from Daniel chapter 6. The Bible passage does not give us Daniel's perspective on his night spent among the hungry beasts, only King Darius' concern for the man he had unwittingly condemned. Rubens, on the other hand, placed the viewer with Daniel in the lions' den, focusing on the personal emotions of the prophet. What do you see Daniel doing? What do you think he is feeling?

Rubens' pictures seem to overrun their frames—the action continues beyond what we can see. Much like a photograph, the canvas simply captures a specific area, and we know there is much left off beyond the boundaries of the frame. This effect is particularly true of this large canvas. If you ever have the chance to visit The National Gallery of Art in Washington, D.C., I hope you will take the opportunity to visit this picture in person. The painting is very large, more than 7 feet high and almost 11 feet wide.

The lions in this painting seem to have as many expressions as human figures are capable of. Rubens had the opportunity to draw and paint lions from life when he worked for the Duke of Mantua, who kept a collection of wild beasts, known as a menagerie. What kinds of expressions can you identify in the lions themselves?

